THERAPY DOG: Discussion Led by Stacey Eaton

Pinkerton currently has three therapy dogs: Luna, Apollo, and Lucy. Therapy dogs are individually trained or certified. Luna has completed testing and one observation and is a K9 good citizen. Therapy dogs are different from service dogs, which are trained to perform specific tasks for a handler with a medical need. Therapy dogs support students with reading. Boonefield Therapy Dog Program is where the dog for Candia would come from. Research shows social-emotional benefits, increased reading and language skills, improved attendance, positive mood, and social skill development. A University of California study showed a 12% boost in reading proficiency when kids read to dogs.

Ms. Laura Mogavero would be the handler of the dog for Candia, she is in her second year at Candia. A Board Certified Behavior Analyst (BCBA), she has experience and family support, and is involved in improving school culture. Laura runs the Lancer Lounge, which provides proactive space for students needing tier 2 and tier 3 support.

Options for funding the dog. School fundraising to offset the cost of the dog and/or training. School district taking on the cost of insurance. Owner Responsible for any remaining costs of the dog.

Next steps for the therapy dog. Seeking approval from the board. Laura would be the handler. Boonfield Labs would help identify the best dog. Determine funding support or fundraising.

Dana Buckley made a motion to authorize fundraising to offset the cost of purchasing the dog, with the owner covering the difference. The district would provide the liability insurance.

Merideth Wilson asked what was the rationale for having a therapy dog. Stacey Eaton responded with: Research shows that dogs in schools can motivate kids to come to school and improve staff morale. Dogs can support positive behavior and create excitement. Luna's handler shared an experience where a dog helped de-escalate a student in the hallway.

Dana Buckley called the motion to approve funding for annual liability insurance and authorize staff to fundraise for the dog. The dog owner will cover all other costs, not the school district.

Heather Tremblay seconded the motion. Four voted in the affirmative. One voted not. The motion passed.
